Preventive care services: Get the most out of your Blue Cross plan

You know the old saying: An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. That's especially true when your health is concerned. Because certain preventive care services, health screenings and tests are covered under Original Medicare, Blue Cross Medicare Advantage plans also cover them when they're provided by an in-network doctor. Whether you're new to Medicare or already have a Blue Cross plan, using preventive care services is a great way to be proactive about your health and save money, too.

Why is preventive care so important?

Preventive care services are part of a healthy lifestyle because they help you avoid or detect health problems. These checkups and screenings can help prevent serious and costly medical conditions down the road. Some examples include annual health checkups, wellness screenings and immunizations.

What types of services aren't considered preventive care?

Services aren't considered preventive care when they're for an existing illness or injury. Tests or services used to monitor or follow up on an existing condition — or services that aren't on any of the lists of required preventive care services — aren't considered preventive care. If a service isn't considered preventive care, your share of the costs may still apply (such as the usual deductible, copayment or coinsurance).

What types of services are considered preventive care?

The chart below highlights key preventive care services that are currently covered at no cost to you if you get them from a health care provider in our network. This isn't a comprehensive list of all preventive care services. Your coverage may vary from the types of benefits listed below. Some preventive care services require that you meet certain criteria and health conditions, so check with your plan before you schedule an appointment.
